Centrix Energy Partners, LLC and Upper 90 Energy, LLC Announce Merger to Strengthen and Expand Their Midwestern Presence

Centrix Energy Partners, LLC, a nationwide professional services firm that provides planning, design, construction, and financing for public sector clients across the United States ("Centrix"), and Upper 90 Energy, LLC, a leading Wisconsin K-12 focused planning, design, and construction firm ("Upper 90"), announced their merger today, adding significant operational capabilities and financial resources to meet the strong demand coming from their Midwestern clients.

Adam Corwin, President of Centrix, will oversee the integration of the companies and will lead the combined organization. In reference to his long and successful business relationship with the Founders of Upper 90 (Mario Millonzi and Ben Terpening), Corwin said, "I have worked with Mario and Ben for many years and in fact, they were both instrumental in consulting with us during the initial creation of Centrix. We have collaborated together on several previous joint ventures and this merger just formalizes an already great working relationship." Additionally, Corwin added, "Mario and Ben have consistently delivered great results to more than fifty (50) school districts in Wisconsin and they have assembled a very talented and high-performing team. We look forward to leveraging many of their innovative processes to develop and deliver other successful projects throughout Wisconsin and the neighboring states as well."

Mario Millonzi will take on an expanded role as the General Manager for Centrix in Wisconsin. Millonzi said, "We are very excited to be formally joining the Centrix Team. This merger enables us to better service our public sector clients. We will now have bonding capabilities exceeding $250M and can share in the personnel and technical resources which come from being part of a larger national company."

In addition to continuing his existing role, Ben Terpening will also take on the added responsibilities as the Vice President of Engineering for Centrix nationally. Terpening added, "What's great about this merger is that it will provide more value-added services to our existing clients and for our employees. In the past, there have been several viable projects that were brought to us by our clients that we really didn't have the financial balance sheet or bonding capacity to pursue on our own. As part of the larger Centrix

Team, we are now in a much better position to deliver the same great results that our Wisconsin-based clients have come to expect, but also do it on a much larger scale and across a much larger geography." Terpening added that the technical training, career advancement opportunities, and enhanced benefits for its employees, were also key factors in completing this merger with Centrix.
